In view of the headline stories on "Clout City" and Ald. Thomas E. Keane, the meat boycott must have spread to the City Council —something smells awfully fishy there. . . . Also fishy: Sherman Skolnick, the legal researcher, claims he has secret documents on the Watergate case and turned them over to customs officials in Canada during his mysterious absence. The P.S.: U.S. Atty. Jim Thompson received a call from the customs officials, asking, "What are we supposed to do with these documents Skolnick pressed on us?" Thompson suggested the papers be mailed to him and he will see that they are returned to Skolnick.
